Child Guidance Topic At County Principals' Meet

A project for child guidance in morals, manners, ideals and citizenship was the theme of discussion at the meeting of the Santa Clara County Elementary Principals' association, which met in the San Jose Y. W. C. A. cafeteria Tuesday night. Principal Ira R. Abbott of Campbell presided.

Kenneth Slater, principal of the Mountain View school, gave a 15-minute talk on the work planned and accomplished in his community. Discussion by the members followed his address.

Ira Abbott outlined the plans worked out by the Campbell committee. The objectives set up are: the improvement of morals and manners; the instilling of right ideals; and development of real American citizens among the children.

Eight methods of attaining these objectives are planned, including: the example of the teacher; pictures; oral socialized recitations; mottoes; and a merit system, with points deducted for all infractions of moral and social codes and awards to all pupils maintaining a 100 per cent standard for the year.

The Campbell grammar school program will emphasize a definite subject during each year of the child's school life. In the first grade helpfulness will be taught; in the second grade home life will be the subject. The third grade will learn of work; the fourth, golden deeds; the fifth, loyalty; the sixth, friendship; the seventh, patriotism; and the eighth, will learn how to choose a calling.

The Santa Clara County Elementary Principals' association will meet next Tuesday noon, during institute, in the Y. W. C. A. cafeteria.

Palo Alto Grays Lose 8-5 Sunday To Campbell Foxes

Sunday at the local diamond the Campbell Foxes administered a drubbing to the Palo Alto Grays. A good crowd witnessed the fray which culminated in an 8-5 win for the home boys.

The game was well played, and heartily approved by the fans. Palo Alto got ten hits, one of which brought in a run in the fourth inning. Campbell closed down on them during the next two innings, but the last three frames saw the Grays stack up four runs.

Campbell scored four runs off the first five hits, and in the second got two more hits. In the seventh Campbell got one hit, and in the eighth scored two runs on two hits.

Brown, Palo Alto, started for the Grays, and was replaced by Jones at the end of the second inning. Jones looks like a real hurler and is expected to make it tough for other Valley teams.

Lindner and Felice, first and second, Campbell, made several spectacular plays.

INTIMIDATING THE COMMISSION

In a recent issue of Public Utilities Fortnightly, Francis X. Welch writes on "Regulation by Intimidation of State (public service) Comissions." He says: "The average state comission, created to handle an admittedly complex field, is bombarded with a daily torrent of letters from Tom, Dick and Harry, containing gratuitous advice (frequently accompanied by voting threats) on how to do its own woork."

The comission has the nature of a court with the purpose of deciding disagreements between the utility, on the one hand, and the public on the other. If its work is to produce the best possible results it must be carried on without interference. And those who attempt to tell it "how to do its own work" are opposing their own best interests.

No commission is authorized to lower utility rates to the point where the company is unable to operate at a legal profit. None is authorized to raise them so that the company can make more money merely because it would like to do so. The average commission deals daily with the most difficult and argumentative questions—of valuation, policy and the like. If its critics, instead of trying to force it to take certain steps because of intimidation, would give their efforts to cooperating with it in an effort to solve problems affecting all of us, there would be much less heard of the "power issue" and similar political shibboleths.

State commission regulation has been an almost unqualified success in this country. Where it has failed, the "friends of the people" have been as much to blame as any other factor. There is doubtless room for improvement in the laws under which commissions work, and there probably room for improvement at times in the personnel of one commission or another. We should strive in that direction—and not try to bluff the comissions into actions which would only lead to endless litigation in the courts and eventual disavowal by the law.

IT MAY BE LOADED

With the recent opening of the duck hunting season, morticians are rubbing their hands, and surgeons are polishing up their instruments. For the duck hunters are always good for a considerable number of casualties.

Already scattered reports indicate that this year is no different from previous years. Several hunters have been shot to death; more have inadvertantly shot themselves. Others have been maimed.

The cause? Pure, unadulterated carelessness. Men and boys of hunting age should have minds sufficiently developed to recognize and observe the common-sense safety laws of the hunt. They should know that their weapons are capable of inflicting fatal wounds, and govern their conduct accordingly.

Perhaps the simplest of these laws is this: "Never load your gun until you are on the spot where you are going to hunt; unload it before you return to your car or club." More people are killed getting loaded guns out of cars, dragging them through fences, and into or out of boats than at any other stage of the hunt. The fact that hunters will shoot at waving reeds to see if a duck is concealed there, accounts for others.

The rules are unwritten, but they're plain to all. Use your head, if you have one; if you haven't, don't go hunting.

NOT A BAD IDEA

The Cumberland county (New Jersey) grand jury recommends the re-establishment of the whipping post, for the "sake of economy and to create a respect for organized society and family relations."

There is no question but that such an institution would save the taxpayers' money. For example: instead of feeding and lodging a man for 30 days on a wife-beating charge, he would receive 30 lashes on his bare back. It would be doubly economical, in that it would save the cost of the offender's maintenance, and would instill in him a reluctance to feature in a repetition of the whipping, thus saving the time of peace officers. And it would insure the ill-treated wife decent treatment.

A reckless driver, for instance, would take a chance on ten days in jail, but he wouldn't care so much about facing ten lusty lashes on his tender back. And once having tasted the whip, even the most "hard-boiled" would hesitate to do anything which would lead them to the post again.

Professional thugs may sneer at a couple of years in the penitentiary—but if the sentence was to be one year in the penitentiary, with 20 lashes a week for 52 weeks, none off for good behavior, fewer potential criminals would take the initial step towards a life of crime. It is human to dread the lash; why not reinstate it? Nothing else seems to do the trick.

* * * *

AND WHY NOT?

An editorial in the Minnesota Daily, chronicle of the University of Minnesota, suggests that inasmuch as the football team is a money-making proposition, the players should receive remuneration other than the plaudits of the multitude.

In this opinion we heartily concur. In fact, we have for several years believed that a college football hero, unless he has a nice lower berth on the "gravy train," is not so much a hero as he is plain, garden variety sap.

As it is now, in colleges where it is not permissable to cross the athlete's palm with silver, the football player gets cheers—if he's good enough—and a certain, easily forgotten popularity. In return for this, he gives his time from the day school opens in the fall until after Thanksgiving day. He lives like a Spartan; evening "skull practice" frequently takes up the time he should be studying, and he has no time to earn money should that be necessary to his college career. He works harder than a ditch digger; there is always the possibility of getting permanently injured or even killed, and the nervous "let-down" at the end of the season doesn't do him any good.

All this applies, of course, to players who are first of all students—not imported thugs who are at school for the express purpose of slugging their way through the football season at a price.

So why shouldn't they get a cut of the money they draw into the treasury of the athletic board? Without them, there would be no money; and most of them would rather have a piece of change than a cheer.

THE WRONG ANGLE

Misinterpreting the repeal of the Wright act, a California judge the other day fined a drunken driver just one dollar, maintaining that with the Wright act out of the picture there is no enforcement law.

The good judge is very much wrong, for while the repeal of the Wright act is going to make enforcement of the 18th amendment difficult in California, it does not give drunken drivers right-of-way on the public highways. To drive an automobile while under the influence of intoxicants is just as much a crime today as it ever has been. And if the 18th amendment is finally repealed, it will still be a crime to operate an automobile when drunk. A drunken driver is a potential murderer, and as such should be restrained. If he is apprehended in the act, he should be so severely punished that he will not repeat the offense.

A STEP TOWARD RECOVERY

In August, 1926, the railroads of the country employed 1,793,067 persons.

In August, 1929, they employed 1,681,252 persons.

In August, 1932, they employed 996,319—the smallest number since 1899.

In addition, reduced purchases by railroads from coal mines and other industries have caused even larger reduction in employment.

The railroads are not employing 797,000 less people now than they did in 1926 because they do not want to provide employment. They are employing less because gigantic decreases in railroad earnings have made it impossible for them to take any other course than decisive retrenchment. Had the decreases been the result of depression alone, they would seem much less important than they are. But the principal cause of transportation difficulties is, and has been, the inequalities in our transportation policy.

The railroads make no unreasonable requests. Here is what they do ask: That they be given fair treatment and that all forms of commercial transportation be placed on an equitable basis before the law. This means that the government must stop subsidizing waterways and that highway competitors must receive regulation similar to that now exerted over the railroads. When that is done, hundreds of thousands of railroad men will return to their jobs, a multitude of other industries will be stimulated—and we will have taken a long step toward recovery.

THE FARMERS CORNER

By Ralph H. Taylor

California's bumper crop of farm laws, dating from the days of the gold rush to the present era and including thousands of separate acts and resolutions, will shortly appear in a compact agricultural code of a single volume.

Drafted by the California Code commission, with the aid of California farm organizations, the new agricultural code is now nearing completion and will be submitted to the state legislature at its coming session.

Pruned and thinned, with conflicts, inconsistencies and ambiguities eliminated, the new code will group together in one place all of California's progressive farm laws, including comprehensive quarantine, pest control and standardiza tion statutes which have become models for the entire nation.

Within the code itself, the law will be grouped in divisions, each relating to a single subject, to make it possible for the farmer to consult the statutes on any phase of agriculture without the assistance of a lawyer. "Farm laws for farmers," ready of access, clear-cut and easy of understanding, has been made a major objective in the new code and hundreds of obsolete and superseded laws will be repealed to make possible the compact "all in one" volume of agricultural legislation.

The huge task of re-writing and simplifying the California farm law, which has required nearly two years of work by expert code draftsmen of the state commission, with the constant assistance of leaders in each branch of the farming industry, has involved a page-by-page study of 25,083 statutes adopted during the period from 1849 to 1931.

California, the study revealed, has more farm laws than any other state in the nation, mainly due to the great diversification of its agricultural industry and the fact that its markets are scattered over the entire world. The California farm laws govern the production, protection and marketing of 186 commercial crops grown in the state, whereas the average state produces less than a dozen commodities in commercial quantities.

Indicative of the tremendous scope of the state's farming industry, and the magnitude of its legislative problems, every crop grown in the United States is produced in California, with the minor exception of a few tropical fruits grown in the southern tip of Florida. The new farm code, in addition to covering local problems of the industry, will include carefully worked out statutes to meet marketing conditions in practically every country in the world.

The code commission, headed by Thomas C. Ridgway of Los Angeles, with Fred Wood, chief of the legislative counsel bureau, as its secretary, has evinced a commendable desire to "make the law fit the problem," instead of the too common expedient of making the problem fit the law, with the result that the new code promises to close many loop-holes in the existing statutes.

Running through the farm statutes, incidentally, is a dramatic story of the history and development of California agriculture. In 1850, for instance, only two acts affecting agriculture were adopted— one relating to lawful fences and the other to marks and brands. The industry, at that time, was predominantly cattle raising; the fruit industry was still unborn.

Jumping to 1931, the legislation included 200 farm bills introduced and 61 finally enacted, the new measures covering newly created problems of standards for fruits, nuts, vegetables, eggs and commercial feeding stuffs, meat inspection, dairy and dairy products legislation, quarantine and pest control laws. Many of these measures, however, were amendments to existing statutes necessitated by changing market conditions and standards.

The forthcoming session will mark a new step forward under the compact farm code—the repeal of unnecessary laws and the simplification of others.

BOOKS

The Prophetic Marriage - Warwick Deeping.

A man is much more sentimental than a woman. Warwick Deeping proves this generalization in his latest novel. This author of Sorrell and Son is degenerating into rank emotionalism.

However, if one likes heroes like fairy princes, and villains who are truly black, the novel should while away several hours happily.

The story is a good one laid in an authentic British atmosphere. Tod Western, the hero, is a real heman, with an unexpected weakness for red lips and peaches and cream complexions and the story book heman inability to read female minds when their exteriors are pleasant.

So Tod is taken by a British version of the gold-digger. He loses friends, money and happiness when he takes the gold-digger to the altar. Gold-diggers do not belong in marriages, Tod discovers, and the next time he observes women he has learned his lesson.

Lonley Americans - Rollo Walter Brown.

Gathered together in this fascinating collection of biographical sketches are the Americans whom the world has not understood. Among them groups Abraham Lincoln, Emily Dickinson, Charles W. Eliot, Edward MacDowell and James Whistler.

Hitherto unknown bits of biography are charmingly told. Interpretations of the lives have a freshness that is charming.

Particularly amusing are conversations retold where the great and near-great prove themselves provided with the touch of nature which makes all man kin.

The volume is illustrated with artistic photographs of the subject and is written in an artistic manner which harmonizes well with the pictures. It is literature, good for one. and surprisingly easy to take.

Mrs. Harry Barnes' Birthday Is Motif Of Surprize Party

Mrs. Harry Barnes was delightfully surprised by a group of friends who gathered at her home Wednesday night in honor of her birthday.

Harry Barnes, and his daughter, Miss Harriet, planned the affair. The guests, meeting at the Cambrian school, gleefully appeared en masse at tthe Barnes door.

Whist was the diversion of the evening. Mrs. Lawrence Hendricks won the prize for the highest score and Mrs. George Husted received the low score prize. At midnight was served a dainty supper of which a huge birthday cake was the center of interest.

Present at the birthday celebration were Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hendricks, Mr. and Mrs. Leland Jones, Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Clendening, Mr. and Mrs. George Husted, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley B. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Lomax, Mrs. Otto Buschjost, Fred Hubback, Chester Topham, Mrs. A. C. Brundrett, Miss Harriet Barnes, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Barnes.
